I write to object to the plans to build Sizewell C.

My reasons are many, but can be summarised as below:

1. This installation will take too long to build, and by the time it comes online it will be obsolete. Renewables will have further leapt ahead, in terms of performance and cost.
2. The impact on the AONB and the surrounding towns and villages is totally out of proportion to any benefit which may accrue.
3. The Suffolk Coast is eroding. It is just not a good idea to build here.
4. I understand that EDF had not planned adequately in advance for a suitable supply of fresh water. That alone should be cause enough to terminate the project now. Building a desalination plant is a hammy solution, and smacks of desperation.
5. Local tourism will be decimated for a decade or more. People will not come just to see the bright midnight lights.
6. Traffic. I just don't want to go there. Only an idiot would try to build something like this in one of the few counties in England which does not have a single motorway.
7. Local businesses will be destroyed. I think that the job-creation claims which EDF have made are bogus.

Yours,

Eamonn O'Nolan
