Dear Sir/Madam

I write in support of Rampion2. While I accept there will be short-term disruption to humans, wildlife and the environment, we must move faster towards green renewable energy for the sake of the whole planet. I am sure many people will keep an eye on any environmental impact and hold the company to task to minimise such impacts and restore the seabed and countryside to good health. In fact, we need to protect the seabed around these wind farms from the destructive fishing practices (trawlers) and do everything to restore the native kelp forests within Sussex Bay - see <https://www.sussexbay.org.uk/> Why not put some of the profits into such projects?

I live near the sea in Worthing [REDACTED] and now cherish the view of the distant windmills. It is now part of the Worthing seascape. We will get use to the new windmills and in 5 years won't even remember a time before them.

I am committed to a sustainable future and we need to be bold with such infrastructure. Please do not feel everyone is against such progress even on their doorstep.

Professor Bob Nichol
