

I am not opposed to solar panel development, although I would prefer government policy for it to be mandatory on building development. And I do think this proposed development comes much too close to the residential core of the village. However I am totally opposed to the proposal of unnecessarily placing BESS batteries in fields in the countryside. They would pose an enduring environmental and health threat to the habitat and surrounding residential areas. Our prevailing winds here are south westerly thus threatening countryside and conurbations all the way up the M20 corridor and towards London and East. (Remember Chernobyl). They should be placed on a secure considerably located industrial estate with adequate emergency safety systems in place.
