

Right technology, wrong place. Every car park, factory, village hall, warehouse, service station, and roof should be covered before we use farm land for this use. The claim that there is not enough roof space is rubbish - every square inch of tarmac, paving, brick covered by solar is less impactful than every green space. The UK is a tiny island that needs all the green space we can spare, especially with climate change and war causing food shortages. We need a joined up approach, not individual private companies profiting from our desperate need to act.
