

My greatest concern regarding this proposed solar farm is the loss of versatile (BMV) agricultural land currently yielding well and contributing to UK's food security.

If the government insists on the need for solar panels simply legislate that every solar panel be fitted to every newly built property and leave our beautiful land and countryside for farming and nature.

In addition, I would also like to remind those with the powers in the decision making process that solar panels do contain heavy metals such as arsenic and selenium and will no doubt have a significantly high costs to dispose of safely when the panels come to end of life.

In general this particular project is ill-conceived and on a scale so large I am dumbfounded that it has even reached this far in the planning process.

I hope common sense will prevail and this project is rejected entirely
