

The Scheme (dishonestly labeled a farm) will have a negligible effect on improving the planet's climate, and may even have the reverse effect when you consider the effects of construction, the effect of manufacturing millions of plastic solar panels, the effect of their transportation from china, the effect of the removal and disposal of the whole scheme after some 40 years.

The loss of irreplaceable countryside and productive farmland to this scheme would be nothing short of criminal.

[REDACTED]

If solar power is for any reason considered beneficial to the well being of the planet no land based schemes should be permitted in the UK until every new build housing scheme in the UK and every industrial building is obliged by law to have effective solar panels installed on their rooftops.

Only then could this Botley West Solar Scheme even be considered.
