

There still hasn't been solid answers from the applicant to many questions about this development. I am not against it per se, but their avoidance in answering basics makes me think it is a less than legitimate proposition .

This has been the case from initial interactions at open days to present. If it is just incompetence then I'd question the ability to deliver the project as described anyway.

The funding also remains an open point with question marks over sources of money, and previous projects which have remained incomplete.

Can see the headlines now in 20 years when the reality of this project is woken up to.
