I support every one of my MP Calum Miller's Parliamentary Questions tabled on November 5th regarding the Botley West Solar Farm in Oxfordshire.

In addition I would like to add the following points. Not much attention has been given to the very real problems relating to the manufacture of the solar panels by the Chinese State. Given the CCP's growing worldwide aggression I consider it very unwise that the UK should use panels made in China.

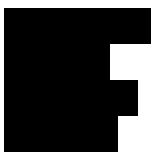

Firstly there is the very real possibility that they may be controlled remotely, for example switched off or otherwise manipulated for the benefit of China.

Secondly, given the fact that many lithium bike batteries have caught on fire and proved dangerous to life recently, what is the risk of the larger lithium batteries that will be used for storage of electricity catching fire for some reason and causing devastating wildlife fires over swathes of the countryside?

Last but not least, given the cruel repression of the [REDACTED] by the Chinese, including keeping them in camps, sterilising women and separating families, and also the virtual takeover of Tibet, should the UK really be supporting China by giving this enormous amount of money and power to such a cruel and avaricious state?

It almost feels as if we are opening the UK door wide open and throwing away the key. We should be drilling our own oil instead.
