

I am not sure which of the options I should tick- I am writing to emphasise the comments I made earlier, that I oppose the development on the following grounds

It is far too large for one development.

I understand that the developer has not replied to a number of questions and this shows a lack of respect for local people.

I also understand that final details of what will happen at Farmoor have not yet been fully described. This causes uncertainty and anxiety and shows that the developer has a very cavalier attitude to the whole process.

The development plans to cover agricultural land, at a time when food security is becoming more urgent. Some of the land is of a high quality, and it has all been farmed successfully.

It would be unsightly in an area known for its beauty.

It would be inappropriate in an area of historical importance.

It might damage the tourist industry which is important in Oxfordshire.

In addition, I wonder if the developer assumes it will all go ahead whatever anyone says, ie has been given the wink by the government? This would explain the cavalier attitude and lack of concern for local opinion. I do hope that this is not the case, and that the proposal will be carefully scrutinised and all opinions seriously considered.