Subject: Secretary of State's acceptance of further inputs from applicant

You don't often get email from [REDACTED]

Dear Sirs,

I do not understand why the Secretary of State has accepted further inputs from the applicants, having previously refused to do so.

The fact remains that even now, the applicant's submissions do not provide basic information necessary for the proper consideration of their application.

To cite but one example, there remains no definition of where, when and how the solar farm would be connected to the national grid.

This despite the Inspector's expressed concerns.

It appears the applicants expect to obtain approval for the solar farm and then will design and construct it, with those affected by their project unable to have any effective input to how the project will affect them.

Whilst this is how things are done in countries such as Russia and China; it should not be the way things are done in the United Kingdom.

I hope that the Secretary of State will now refuse the application, since basic information required for proper consideration of the application has not been supplied by the applicants.

I have copied this e-mail to my constituency MP with the reminder that I have still received no substantive reply to earlier correspondence relating to this matter.

It would appear that he is reluctant to express any view.

That is a shame and may influence voting at the next election.

Yours faithfully,

Alwyn Seeds
