

I am an [REDACTED] who has lived in Botolph Claydon my whole life and am extremely passionate about the area, its wildlife and special rural farming community.

Firstly since my previous representation I would like to comment that the whole NSIP process is extremely difficult to navigate and I feel that it is unfair that these large corporates can rely on a procedural process that bombards us with so many documents and small print that no normal person can actually get a clear idea of what is really going on.

My concerns remain that this area is not suitable for a large project like Rosefield. They have not properly considered the reality of the access problems. I have recently passed my driving test and already I regularly nearly get run off the road by HS2 traffic. It is terrifying. The roads are badly damaged and this, together with so much more heavy HGVs and other construction traffic is going to make travelling around the area very hazardous for young drivers like me. We are nowhere near any main roads and surely the sites should be chosen on the basis of appropriate transport links.

I have also struggled with my mental health and my safe space is walking my dogs around the beautiful walks in the area. It makes me upset to see the way this is breaking the whole village up as I know that so many people find peace in the wonderful landscape and it truly will ruin many many peoples lives. The noise, light and scenery pollution are going to be horrific. Whilst Rosefield say they will mitigate this they have no idea how quiet and calming it is in the village.

Finally, having done geography A level I will not even go into the fact that the UK is proven as an insufficient country for solar. Surely the government should focus on better things for this country like waves and wind. I hope you will consider how this will ruin many people lives and a beautiful historic village and rural area will never be the same again and there are much more sustainable methods of gaining energy. thank you
