

I am a resident of Botolph Claydon. Continuing on from my previous letter I want to add the following. It is the beginning of Spring March 4th and on my walk across the footpaths that follow your planned solar panel installation the sound of skylarks is almost deafening. The hedgerows are already alive with nesting birds. Unfortunately, the corn and barely fields are already gone, as has the farmer, threatened by the solar invasion. I have been shocked by the number of people walking in this area, at least a hundred people in one day. Running, walking their dog, strolling through this quiet countryside. Why does this area have to be destroyed? Why can't it be farmed as before with wheat and barely, rape to help our own food sustainability? The land in this region has already been severely affected. By HS2 and EW rail construction. We treasure the quiet walk that you will destroy. The benefits are overwhelming, good mental health fresh air, peace, exercise involvement in nature. The buzzing of solar panels and destruction of our fields must not happen.
