This will affect the value of our house, we intend to live here for a very long time and want to leave a nice legacy for our children, we saved and spend all our incomes on our home and obviously don't want to end up with negative equity as our house will be devalued by this.

I do believe in greener energy however how green is this when the panels are being manufactured around the world and then transported in plastic wrapping which will all end up in landfill, as will the panels themselves in 20 years, leaving toxic particles in the ground. Land is already used for growing food, this is high quality agricultural land that will be wasted. Not to mention the impact on the local wildlife, the world needs plants, trees etc to survive. Destroying all that seems very detrimental to the planet and the biodiversity of the area. There is so much unused brown field in the towns and cities, as well as disused RAF/army bases that could be used, however this would produce big profits for the companies and individuals pushing these big solar farms on our countryside.
