

After a brief search on Companies House website I discovered that the entity (company) seeking planning permission for East Pye Solar Installation is either partially or wholly backed by an Australian investment company of [REDACTED] reputation. There is only one conclusion that I could draw from that set up. That is to take advantage of an opportunity to maximise returns whilst limiting responsibilities. Realising that the potential for huge damage is real the company with responsibility does not appear to have title to the funds that would be required to alleviate and recompense the affected. The investment company would, no doubt have access to a large share, if not all the financial returns. The energy being sold to UK residents at a rate fixed to benefit the investor, thus diverting a considerable amount out of the domestic economy. The net effect being that the populace would be paying a foreign company to impoverish them. That is, in my belief a view of the financial damage. The environmental damages have been well described by others, I would like to add that the whole scheme is nothing short of environmental vandalism!
