Good evening,

I have been following the open meeting currently taking place at Dunston Hall with great interest.

As a 30 year resident of one of the affected villages, Shotesham All Saints, and born and bred in South Norfolk I would like to know the answers to the following questions -:

* For an infrastructure project to be deemed to be of national importance I realise that it needs to be of some magnitude, when a project is put forward I would imagine that the geographic area is of some importance. It seems to me that the East Pye Solar proposal has achieved national importance by taking a scattered gun approach, they have acquired a hotch potch of parcels of land and by linking them with cables they can claim to be of the required size.

Surely they have [REDACTED] a loop hole in the planning rules, if each individual parcel of land were considered on an individual basis none would be acceptable. Surely the development area should be contiguous.

How has this fundamental question not been addressed?

* I believe in a cradle to grave appraisal of projects, especially of a proposal extending to 60 years. What guarantees are going to be put in place for the decommissioning of East Pye Solar Factory? In 30 years time, when the solar panel technology of today is defunct and the company has declared itself bankrupt who is going to clear up the mess and who is going to pay for it?

* If this ridiculous proposal gets approved and the development starts, if the company decides to put the project on ice, what happens? What guarantees are going to be put in place about completion in a timely manner? Affected families that are going to be blighted by this nationally significant project need to have a guaranteed end date to their anguish.

Many thanks in anticipation of your reply

Rosemary Page-Davies
