Today is the 60th anniversary of the Aberfan tragedy. I believe that site inspections ought to be considered at the four restored former colliery spoil heaps within the area affected by the proposal, namely Kiveton, Dinnington, Thurcroft and Maltby.
Those waste heaps have been (and are being) carefully managed, monitored and contour controlled in the decades since that terrible event. The resultant outstanding public amenities are enjoyed by ever increasing numbers to the benefit of their physical and mental health and appreciation of nature. The regressive re-introduction of an industrialised swathe suggested by the proposal completely contradicts the future landscape vision following Aberfan.
