Changes to access at the Hoverport, Pegwell Bay, Kent

The proposed use of the Hoverport area by the National Grid is in the first instance - justifiably a danger to the wildlife there - on land and in the sea.

Secondly, many members of the public use this area for recreational means throughout a year. Why should their use of the area be stopped.

Any change to the access does not help in anyway as regards to the concerns that many people have.

I understand that the project is estimated to take 4 years and it will take that long, or more, afterwards, for the habitat to be re-established.

Why is it that companies like the National Grid can be allowed to ruin places that are cherished by many?
