Good morning

re unregistered plots ownership being queried

If there are issues of being unable to determine owners, these could be worked forwards via the old available tithe records, especially for the Kent ones if Land Registry documents fail to include these plots anywhere. This came to mind after hearing some of the speakers and the fact that in delving into my own family history, various plots in and around Minster were owned by various ancestors. Trying to follow the descendants of the owners of those specific plots to the modern day would take some work by the applicant but could be feasible. Obviously those descendants could be due compensation in due course (unless legislation states otherwise..

I have previously searched the tithe records via <https://www.thegenealogist.co.uk/>

Kind regards
