

I would urgently request that National Grid makes alternative plans and respects the real value of the areas of Pegwell Bay and Minster marshes. The ecological value of this area is irreplaceable and it would be a devastating loss not only to the rare and endangered wildlife that finds sanctuary there but also to the people of Thanet who already suffer from loss of natural habitat and green areas. There is nowhere else like Pegwell and Minster marshes and its loss would devastate an already struggling natural world. Britain has one of the worst records of wild life provision in Europe if not the worst. National Grid has already shown a shocking lack of respect for the environment during their investigations and I dread to think of what is to come if they proceed with their plans. They show little understanding of the natural environment and even less willingness to learn from those who. This is a very bad move for so-called Green Energy and reflects poorly on those involved in these decisions.
