1.0 Executive Summary

ALE have been requested by Jacobs to complete a high level survey looking into the onshore logistics of 1 No. Transformer from port of entry to site.

As part of this report ALE have approached the Highways Agency for provisional special order approval utilising the closest port of entry which, in keeping with the HA water preferred policy (Appendix B) is deemed to be Avonmouth.

The response from the Highways Agency was that the route had failed as they did not have the necessary structural information for Wynhol Viaduct and M5 Avonmouth Bridge. National grid commissioned structural surveys to be carried out in order to determine the capacity of both structures (Appendix C & D). On completion, the 2 structural surveys provided positive results thus granting provisional special order approval.

As well as applying for a provisional approval, ALE have assisted National Grids proactive approach in liaising with local authorities by producing swept path analysis on 2 junctions of concern (Appendix E). These swept Path drawings show no negotiability issues but highlight the over sail of the transport arrangement which would need to be left clear.

Following a comprehensive route survey carried out by an ALE project manager & experienced driver a minimal amount of street furniture has been identified to be removed prior to delivery. The A38/A368 & Winscombe junction proved to be the tightest turn but at the same time achievable with a number of street lights / signs removed. During a meeting on 26/11/13 between Colin Chandler (North Somerset) and Andy Eagle (National Grid) proposals regarding improvements to the above mentioned junction were discussed. It has been advised that later this year plug in traffic lights/ road signs & barriers will be installed to aid quick removal and reinstatement when AIL's transit through.

5.0 Conclusion

ALE has provided a detailed route investigation report regarding the onshore logistics of 1 No. Transformer from Avonmouth to Sandford Sub Station. ALE are pleased to advise that a transformer of the suggested dimensions & weight does not present any transportation issues in terms of route negotiability. ALE cannot advise on the structural capacity of any structure it may pass over however, in light of the HA feedback, the outcome is positive.

As with any AIL movement, a full special order permit must be applied for by the nominated haulier closer to the date of movement. This permit would take minimum of 8 weeks to acquire and is only valid for 6 month on receipt.

Appendix B – HA Water Preferred Policy

A E P E E E D P I A

This document provides a summary of the Government's water preferred policy. We advise that the document is read in conjunction with the Highways Agency's (HA's) Water Preferred Policy Guidelines document. Click here to download

The Secretary of State for Transport individually authorises the movement by road in Great Britain of the largest and heaviest abnormal indivisible loads that are any combination of the following; over 150 tonnes gross vehicle weight; over 30 metres rigid length; or over 5 metres wide. This is because these loads cause significant traffic congestion and disruption to road users, and require greater safety mitigation.

Since the 1960s the Government has had a stated policy of using coastal shipping for moving the largest and heaviest abnormal loads from the nearest convenient port. Similarly loads for export are required to leave by the nearest port to the place of manufacture.

In 2002 the Government announced its intention to adopt a "water preferred" policy, as a result of the 'Freight on Water' report produced by the Freight Study Group. This policy extends the existing policy of using coastal ports to include the use of inland waterways. The aim of this is to take slow-moving abnormal loads off the road network offering real benefits in terms of reducing disruption and congestion. Formally the policy amounts to two actions:

When the largest abnormal loads are to be moved, the possibility for moving by inland water must be considered; and

If an inland water move is practical, economic and environmentally desirable permission will be refused for the load to travel by road only.

P P

In summary, to minimise the impact on the road network of the largest and heaviest abnormal indivisible loads, it is Government policy that these loads avoid road transport as far as possible by using alternative transport modes, such as water.

1. In principle making use of water as an alternative to road applies to the largest and heaviest abnormal loads. Greater emphasis on using water is generally given to loads that cause the most traffic congestion and impact adversely on journey time reliability. These tend to be:
 - Heavy loads over 150 tonnes in weight;
 - Wide loads over 5m in width;
 - Long loads (over 30m in length) which exceed a typical carriageway width (i.e. over 3.5m in width); and
 - Where there are multiple moves taking place to the same destination

P

2. Wide loads between 5 metres and 6.1 metres wide but under 150 tonnes gross vehicle weight are normally permitted to travel further by road, but this is often dependant on the road route and timing of the move. For example a journey between two ports would not normally be permitted where there is a viable shipping route.
3. Individual long loads, in the region of 30 metres long (assuming that they are not abnormal in any other way), are usually permitted to travel by road, providing access to and from the main motorway network is suitable. The distance permitted to travel off the motorway network will depend on the route because these loads have a similar affect to a wide load, taking up both lanes of a dual carriageway or both sides of a single carriageway road when negotiating a bend or junction. Long, wide loads would not normally be permitted to move significant distance by road.

A

4. Applicants wishing to move the largest or heaviest abnormal loads by road should contact the Agency's Abnormal Indivisible Loads Team in the first instance, ideally at pre-tender stage. Should applicants not contact the Agency at a sufficiently early stage then this could result in delay to their programme as the Agency has the power to refuse route approval until such time as it has been satisfied that all the transport options have been considered. Many of the applications to move by road will be unaffected by the water preferred policy because their journey is either wholly in land with no nearby suitable waterways, involves moving a small number of long loads or prior agreement on the mode of transport has been reached.
5. The Agency's Abnormal Indivisible Loads Team considers each road application individually. Any decision reached to refuse a road move in favour of a waterway or non-established abnormal load port should be on the grounds that movement by water is: - practical, environmentally desirable and economic. If there are no practical or environmental difficulties, a decision is based upon comparing the costs between water and road in a reasonableness test. Consideration is also given to the total additional cost of travelling by water in relation to the cost of the component(s) being moved. Further details on how this is calculated are provided in the Water Preferred Policy Guidelines document (see link above).

A discrete load has subsequently been created in the existing Lusas model of Avonmouth Bridge.

This vehicle load has been run as a moving load and load envelopes were created.

The following diagrams compare the load effects of the ALE50 vehicle plus HA and Dead Load to the ultimate capacity of the north approach span as well as the south approach and main span.

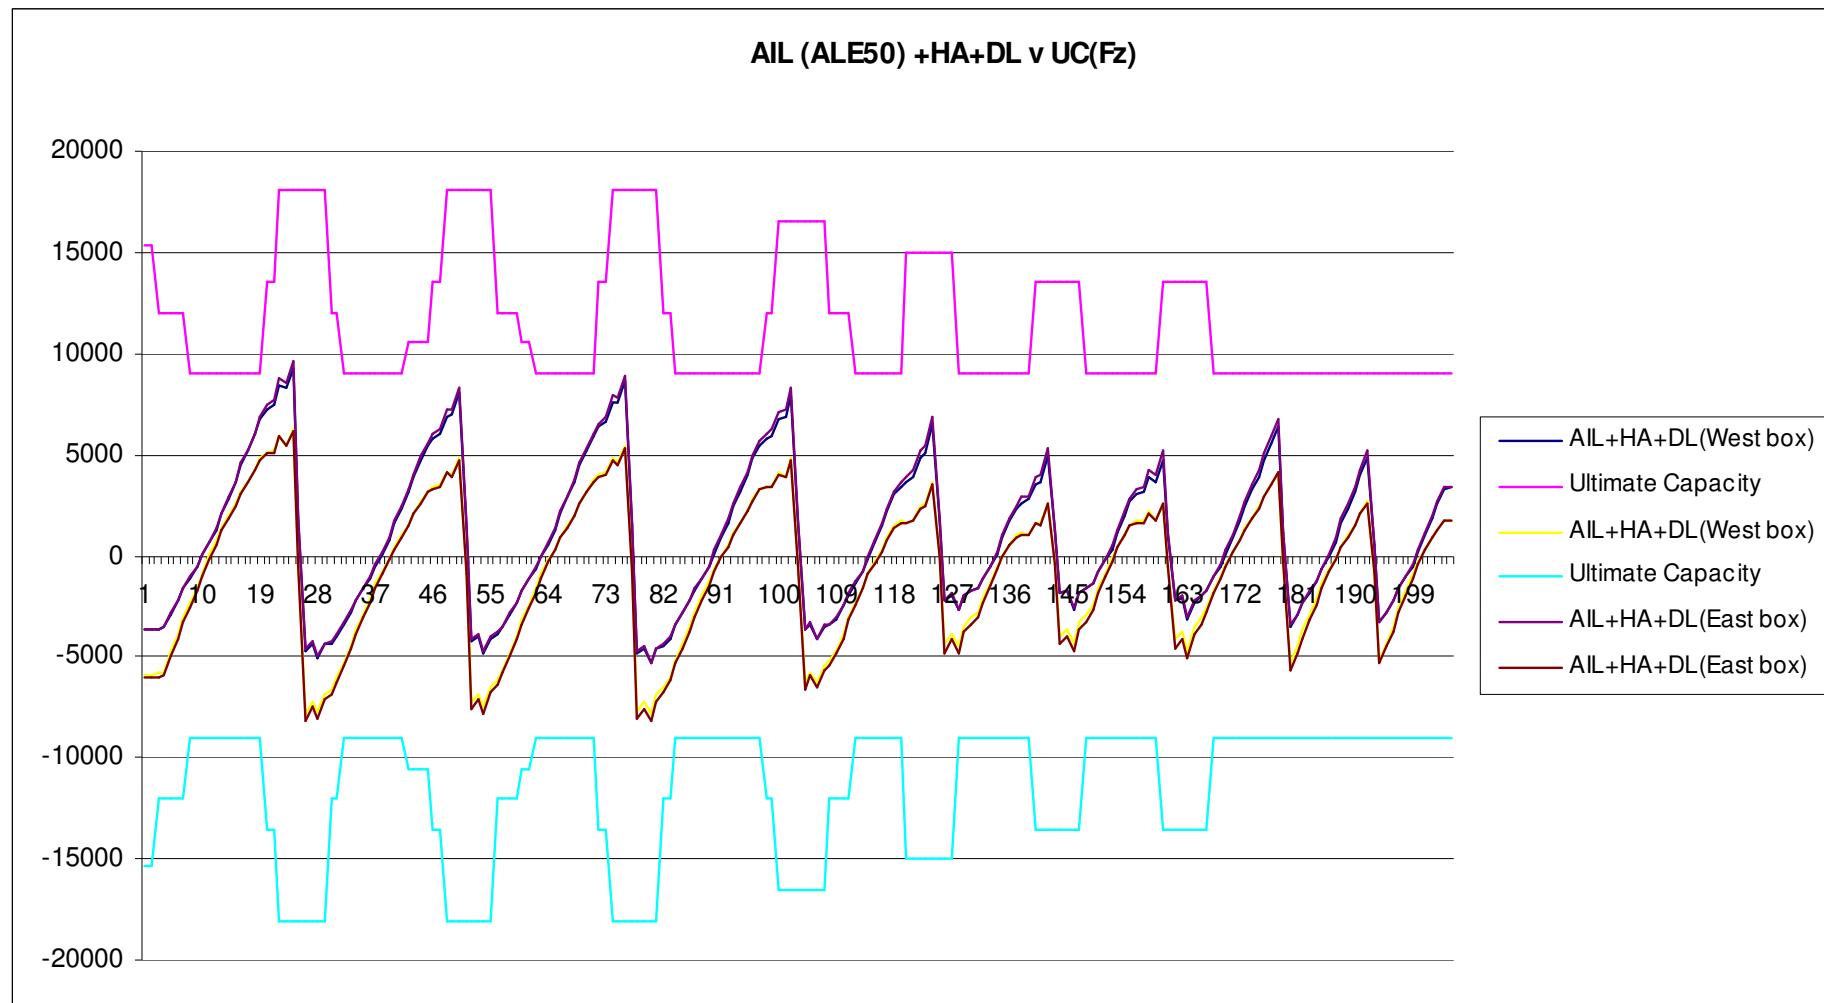

Figure 3.3: Moments due to ALE50 vehicle, HA and dead load compared to the moment capacity of the south approach and main span

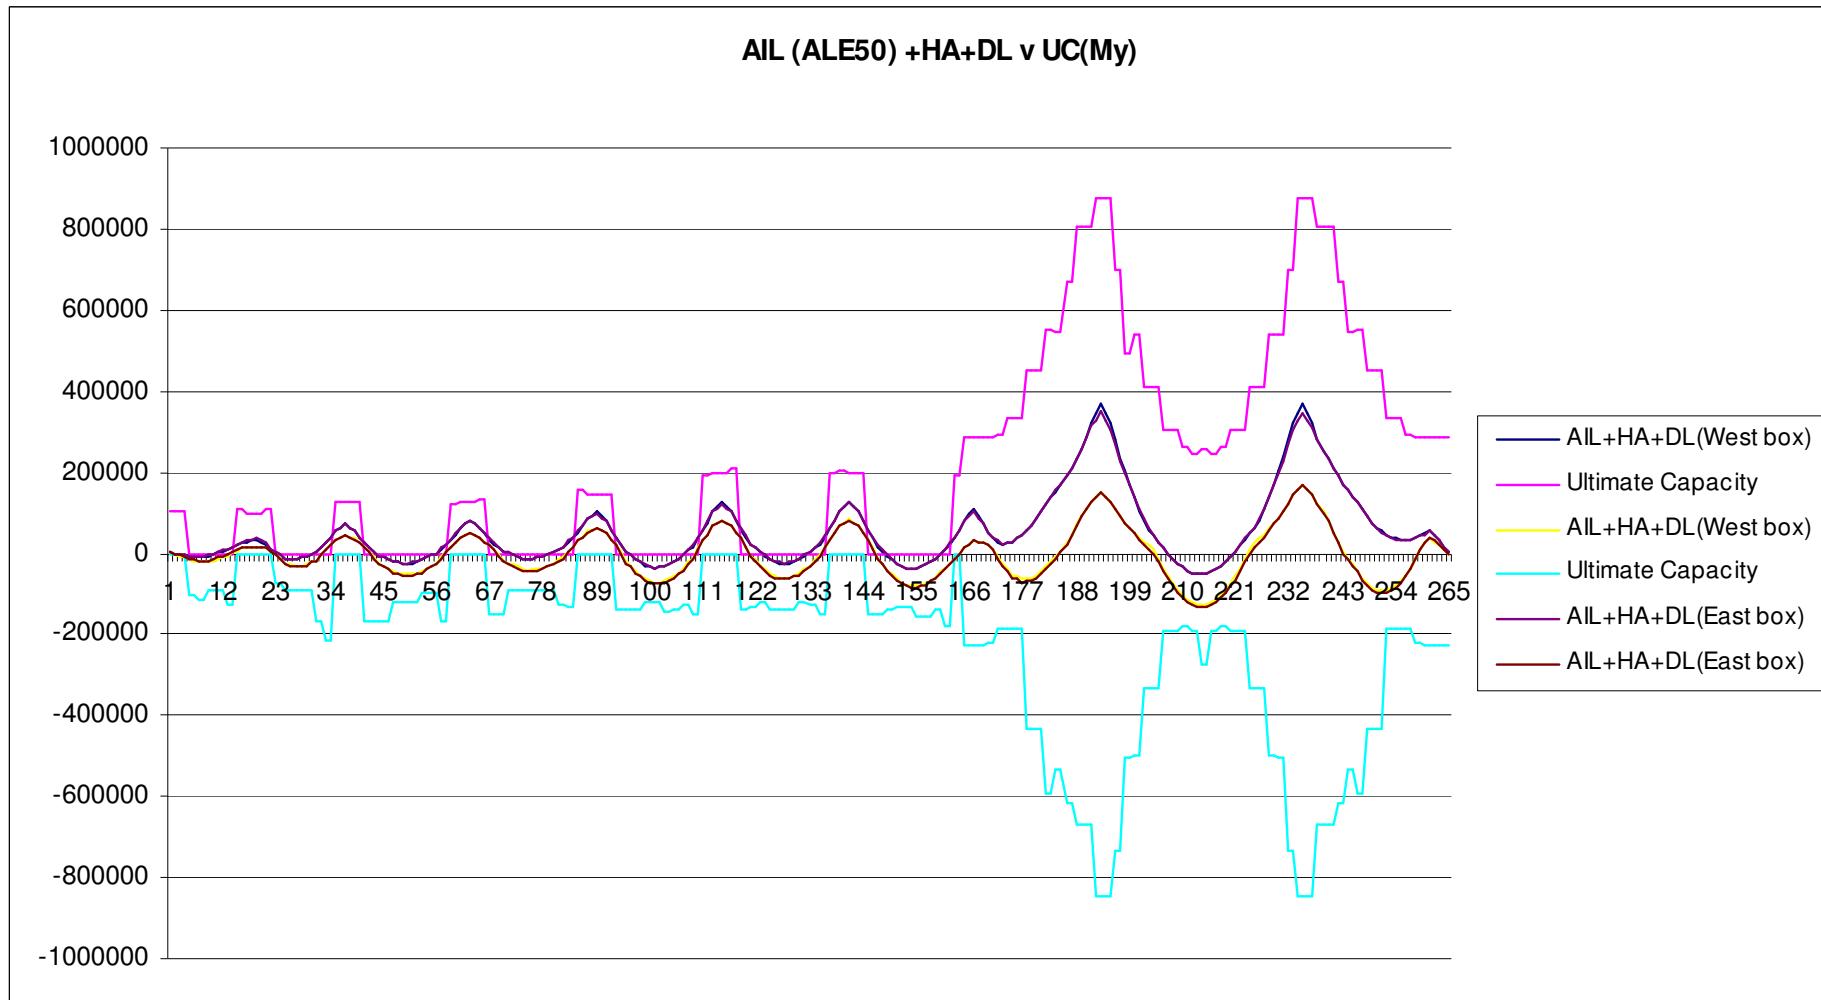

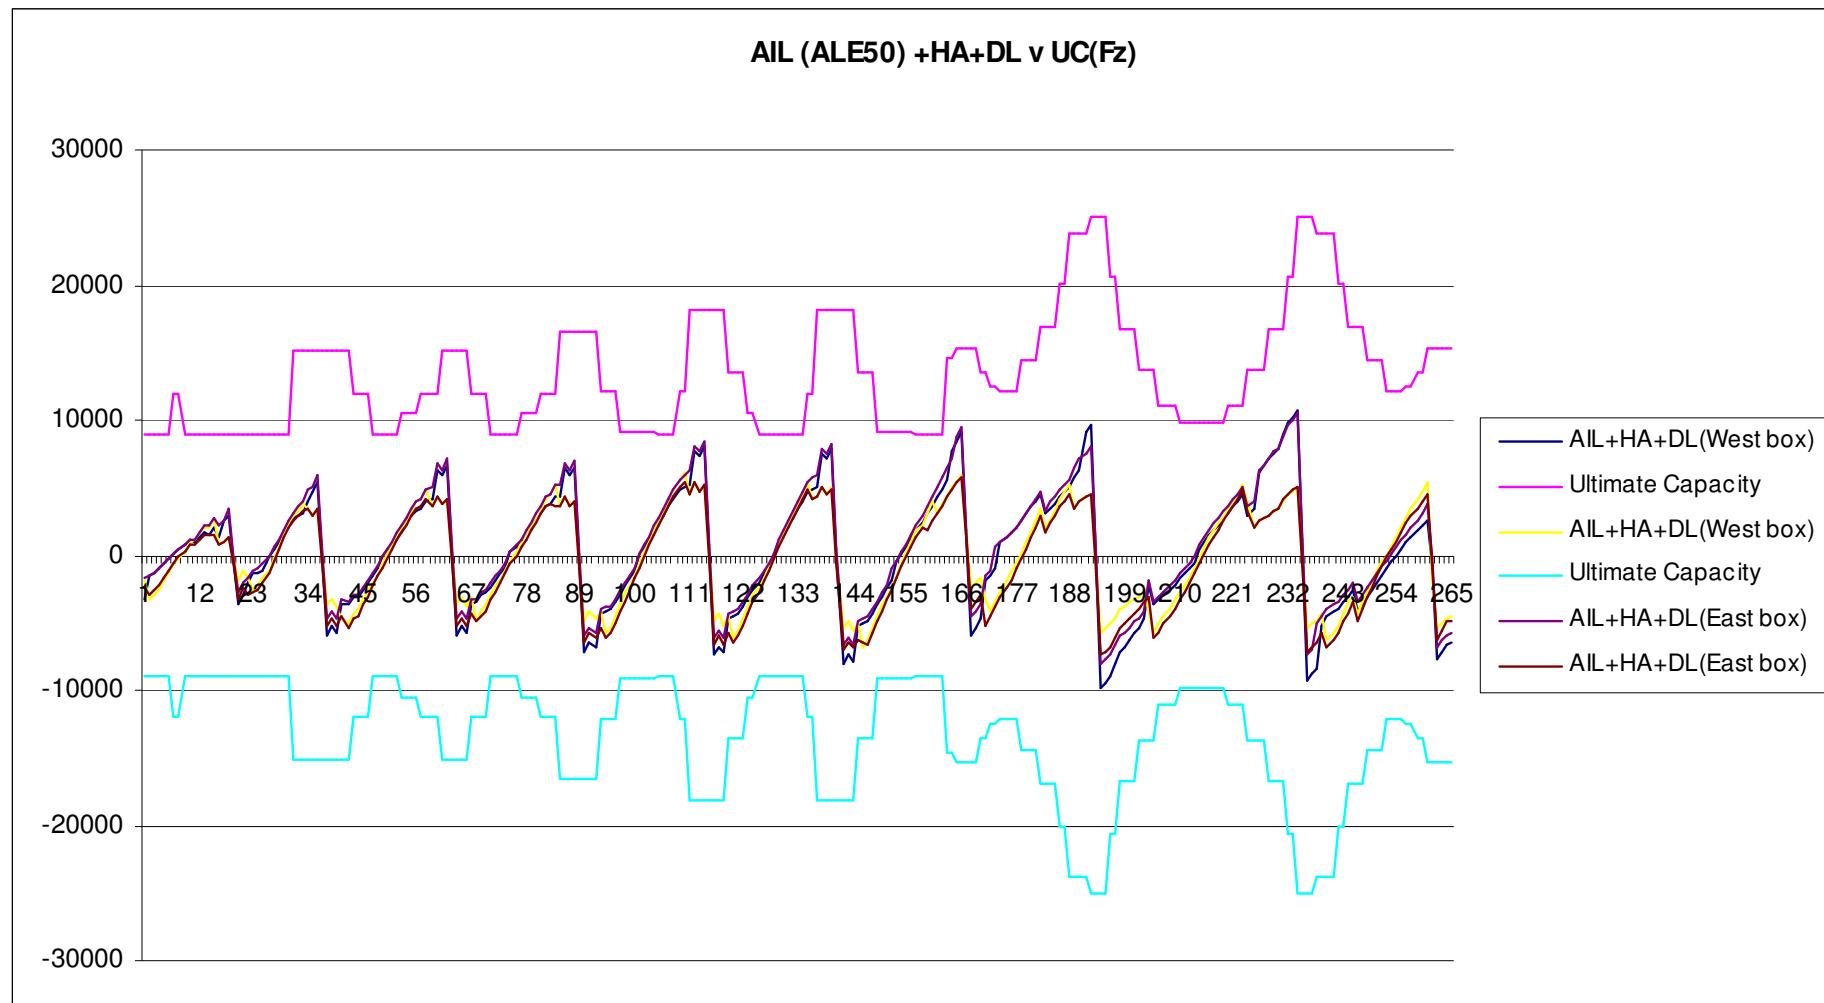

Figure 3.4: Shear forces due to ALE50 vehicle, HA and dead load compared to the shear capacity of the south approach and main span

The ultimate capacity of both the north approach span and the south approach and main span exceeds the combined load effects from ALE50 vehicle, HA and dead load.

Avonmouth Bridge therefore passes the assessment for this specific load type in southbound direction.

The proposed ALE50 vehicle can safely pass Avonmouth Bridge provided the green line markings on the carriageway are followed and a rolling block is used.

1. Introduction

1.1 Previous assessment

Mott MacDonald has been asked to undertake an assessment of the Wynhol Viaduct (North and South Bound) for an abnormal loading.

In February 2010 MM issued report named Area 2 Bridge Assessment Motorways, M5 Wynhol Viaduct Upper Southbound (HA No. /M5//151.30/A, Structure Key 1770), Steady State Assessment Report.

1.2 Structure

The viaduct consists of two separate structures carrying the lower northbound and upper southbound carriageways of the M5 motorway. Span arrangements are $39.62 + 7 \times 56.69 + 45.72 + 34.14\text{m}$ (southbound) and $34.14 + 45.72 + 6 \times 56.69 + 39.62\text{m}$ (northbound).

Details to be find in the previous assessment.

2. Assessment

2.1 Loads

Vehicles to cross the structure are ALE24 and ALE50 with tractors MAN TGX 8 x 4.

2.2 Checked sections

Sections mentioned in captions below to be find in the previous assessment.

2.2.1 Deck – longitudinal direction

Both structures have the same span lengths apart from the fact that northbound structure is one span shorter; therefore the load effects were determined for the southbound structure only.

- sections in spans 1, 2, 3, 8, 9, 10 (bending)
- section above piers U1, U2, U3, U7, U8, U9 (bending plus shear close to pier)

2.2.2 Deck – transverse direction

Critical sections (with reserve factor ψ_{SV} from the original assessment ≤ 1.2) have been chosen for the check.

- section a for bending
- sections e, g for shear

2.2.3 Abutment

Critical sections (with reserve factor ψ_{SV} from the original assessment ≤ 1.2) have been chosen for the check.

- sections f, g, h, j for bending
- sections e and i for shear

2.3 Assessment results

2.3.1 Deck – longitudinal direction

Detailed assessment based on a comparison of the load effects caused by STGO vehicle with effects caused by SV vehicle [BD 86/07 Annex D / caption D3].

The STGO vehicle is considered suitable to pass the structure if:

3. Conclusions and Recommendations

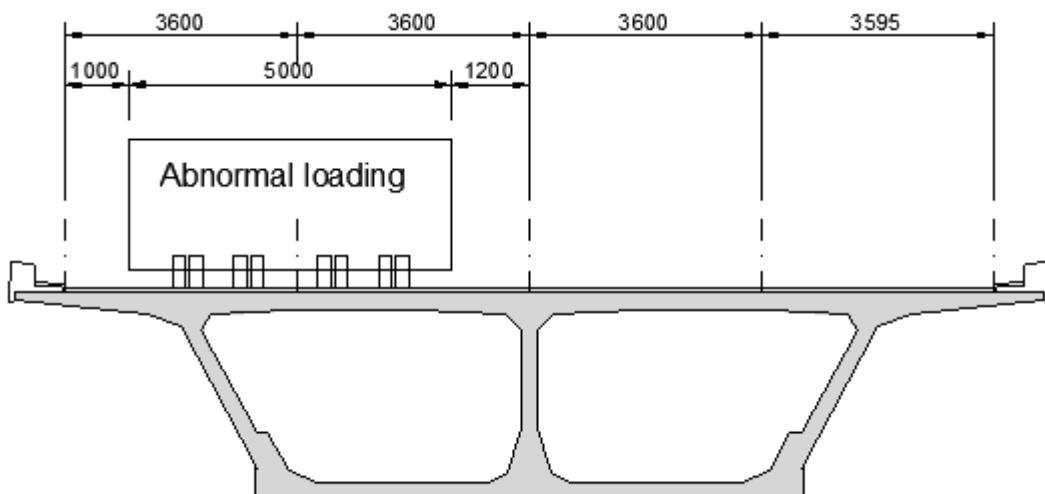

3.1 Conclusions

The structure is capable to carry vehicles with the abnormal loading as defined in the caption 2.1. The vehicles can be moving at "normal" speed as defined in BD 86/07.

3.2 Recommendations

It is recommended that the transverse position of the abnormal vehicle relative to the highway is as shown below. This position is to be kept especially on the abutments.

Transverse position of Abnormal Vehicle
