Hi there,

I'm 25 years old and was genuinely looking forward to Manston re-opening and very disappointed to hear that just because a minority of people in the area were so annoyed by the news that Manston would re-open that it's caused development to cease. I think its important to stress that those that are outspoken against Manston ARE a minority. When you take the total population of the area surrounding Manston into account you'll find that those that didn't complain are far greater than those that did. Unfortunately it's a common occurrence that those that are happy and content with things are not likely to reach out to public forums, social media and other means to express so; whereas those that do complain generally have the loudest voices and will take their grievances to public forums, social media and general public outcry.

Not only is Manston's development great for the area in terms of tourism and commerce but for those of my age group and below I believe Manston will provide a huge and greatly needed boost for job opportunities in the area.

Please re-consider the halt in development. Thanet and the surrounding area can be so so much more than it already is and I really hope to see the area truly thrive which Manston Airport will undoubtedly help to do.
